

Fiber optic distribution equipment and fiber optic cable connectors

AI Overview

Fiber optic distribution equipment, including splice boxes, terminal boxes, and distribution hubs, organizes, protects, and connects fiber optic cables using various connector types like LC, SC, ST, and E2000®.

Fiber Optic Distribution Equipment

Splice Boxes / Fiber Splice Enclosures: These are essential for managing and protecting spliced fiber optic cables. They house splice cassettes that accommodate fiber pigtailed and maintain proper bend radius, strain relief, and organization. Splice boxes can be installed in 19" network cabinets and allow easy access to connectors for maintenance or expansion. They support all common connector types, including LC, SC, ST, and E2000®, and are suitable for indoor and outdoor environments due to their durability and environmental protection features.

Fiber Distribution Hubs (FDH): FDHs are used in FTTH networks to distribute fiber connections to multiple households. They often include splitters for signal distribution and color-coded pigtailed for easy identification. FDHs ensure organized routing of fibers and secure connections between the main network and end users.

Fiber Terminal Boxes / Optical Distribution Boxes: Terminal boxes serve as centralized points for terminating and managing fiber optic cables. They include enclosures, adapter panels, splice trays, cable management, dust covers, and connectors. These boxes are used in enterprise networks, industrial environments, and subscriber premises to provide reliable, high-speed connectivity. They are also known by various names such as fiber access boxes, optical distribution points, and fiber demarcation boxes.

Passive Distribution Hardware: Passive fiber hardware, including racks, housings, and cassettes, supports cable management and port replication to protect active electronics. These systems provide high density, scalability, and reliability for centr...
