

How to split the fiber optic cable for surveillance

Overview

You use optical couplers and splitters to split or join signals in fiber networks. You can also use them to join light from. A fiber broadband provider typically determines and overall split ratio for the network, such as 1x32 or 1x64, and uses combinations of splitters to meet that ratio with each PON port. 1x32 splits were common in North America for G-PON architectures. Also known as optical splitters, fiber splitters, or beam splitters, these devices are integrated waveguides ensuring wide bandwidth and minimal loss in high-frequency applications. Splitting fiber optic cables is a delicate task that requires careful planning, precision, and the right tools. Is this possible?

Do they use different frequencies?

If this is possible how does this affect bandwidth?
