

Tools for binding optical cables

AI Overview

Binding optical cables requires specialized tools such as stainless steel banding tools, cable ties, and fiber-specific strippers and cleavers to ensure secure, precise, and durable installations.

Stainless Steel Banding Tools Stainless steel banding tools are widely used for securing optical cables, especially in outdoor or ADSS (All-Dielectric Self-Supporting) installations. These tools allow for strong, reliable fastening of cables to poles, trays, or other structures. Features include customizable width and length, premium stainless steel material for durability, and diverse installation options such as screw-type, self-locking, or multi-lock ladder types, making them suitable for various cable diameters and environmental conditions.

Fiber Optic Strippers and Cleavers Before binding, optical cables often require preparation. Fiber optic strippers remove the outer jacket, buffer, and coating without damaging the delicate glass core. Triple-hole or multi-stage strippers are ideal for different fiber diameters (250 μm , 900 μm , or larger) and are often paired with Kevlar shears to cut strength members safely. Fiber cleavers provide precise, flat end faces for splicing or termination, ensuring minimal signal loss and optimal performance.

Cable Jacket Slitters and Ring Tools For mid-span access or bundling, cable jacket slitters and ring tools allow technicians to open fiber jackets cleanly without nicking the fibers. Adjustable depth settings and multiple blade options make these tools versatile for drop cables, trunk lines, and indoor fiber runs.

Fusion Splicers and Mechanical Splicing Tools While primarily for joining fibers, fusion splicers and mechanical splicing tools are essential when preparing cables for bundling or routing. They ensure low-loss, high-strength connections, which is critical before securing cables with ties or bands.

Cable Ties and Mid-Span Binding Tools For smaller bundles or indoor installations, high-quality cable ties or buffer tube binder tools can secure fibers neatly. These tools are lightweight, easy to use, and prevent movement that could...
